QUESTION 2

While performing an Installation of UPK Developer, you choose to do a "Server and Client" Installation. You are prompted to install the Microsoft Visual C++ 2008 Redistributable (MSVC++). You are not sure whether to let the installer install this third party application, so you cancel the Installation to do some research on it.

After deciding that it would be all right, you return to the installation. However, this time you decide to perform a "Server" installation because you do not want any client files on your server machine. This time the Installer does NO prompt you to install MSVC++.

Identify the reason for this.

A. In the original Installation, after the installer determined that MSVC++ was needed, it was installed even though you canceled the Installation. The next installation determined that it already existed on the system.

B. Because the Developer server contains no real user interface, the third-party applications including (MSVC ++) do not need to be prompted and will be installed silently. The user will not seethem in use anyway.

C. MSVC++ is only a requirement of the Developer Client. Because the second installation was not installing the client files, the installer does not need to include MSVC++ when installing just the Developer server.

D. The installer determined that MSVC++ was already on the system during both installations.
